Context- The UN recognised Global Alliance of National Human rights Institutions (GANHRI) for the second time has deferred the accreditation of the National Human Rights Commission, India.

Key highlights:

- The GANHRI has been citing objections such as political interference ,involving police in probes into human rights violations and poor cooperation with civil society.
- The GANHRI has also cited in a letter to the NHRC about the lack of diversity in staff and leadership, insufficient action to protect the marginalized groups as reasons for the deferment of the accreditation.

The issue

- The deferment move came after seven human rights watchers and institutions like the Amnesty International, Christian Solidarity worldwide,Frontline Defenders,Human rights Watch,International commission of Jurists ,International Federation for Human rights and the World Organisation against Torture wrote a letter to GANHRI objecting the NHRC India's 'A rank.
- The bodies raised concerns regarding the NHRC'S lack of Independence, plurality, diversity and accountability that are in contrast to the United Nations 'principles on the status of national institutions( The Paris Principles).
- The Paris principles set out six main criteria: mandate and competence, autonomy from government,independence guaranteed by a statute of the constitution, pluralism, adequate resources and adequate powers of investigation.

- The NHRC has repeatedly failed to deliver its mandate particularly to protect the rights of people from the marginalized community, religious minorities and human rights defenders.
- The NHRC, India set up under the Protection of Human Rights Act 1993, passed by the parliament was accredited an 'A' status since the beginning of the accreditation process for NHRCs in 1999 which it retained in 2006, 2011 and in 2017 also after a deferment.
